CARING FOR TEAK

About Teak

Teak is a dense, coarse, close-grained hardwood native to a large region of southeast Asia. It contains high levels of resinous oils that make it naturally resistant to moisture, repellent to insects, and impervious to the drying effects of any weather including hot sun, rain, frost and snow. Teak also contains silica, which creates a density in the wood that make it resistant to mold and fungal decay, water, rotting, warping, shrinking, swelling and many damaging chemicals. Teak will not cause metals it comes in contact with to rust or corrode, and it will last for generations virtually unaffected, even if left unprotected outdoors. Teak is the only wood that can make these claims. No other wood compares to teak regarding its durability, elegance, stability and low maintenance; making it the top choice for shipbuilders and outdoor furniture makers alike worldwide for centuries. Teak is famous for its beautiful grain patterns and golden honey color. Over time, teak gradually changes color to the elegant silver-grey patina which distinguishes finely aged, outdoor teak.

Caring for Teak

One of the greatest features of quality teak wood is that it requires very little maintenance and ages gracefully. If you appreciate the natural color of aged teak, then all you really have to do to keep it looking good is give it an occasional cleaning. A good rinse once or twice a month with a garden hose and wipe down with a towel is plenty in most cases. If you prefer the golden color of new teak, more regular cleanings will maintain much of the original hue. You can also treat teak wood with a teak protector or sealer. This will not extend the life of the wood, but it will preserve the golden honey tone that many people love. Oiling teak will also preserve teak's golden color, but starts a maintenance regimen that involves cleaning and re-oiling every 3 months to 1 year. Regular cleanings are important to remove contaminants from the wood which can grow mold or fungus and eventually damage the exterior of the wood. If you notice little dark spots on the wood's surface, clean them as soon as possible. In a harsher environment, or when cleaning has been neglected, a light scrub with a teak cleaner or mild dish soap and clean water with a soft, nylon bristle brush is all it takes. We do not recommend using a pressure washer to clean our teak cabinetry, but it can be done as long as you do so very carefully and are aware that too much pressure can damage the surface of the wood. Use only low pressure, a wide spray nozzle, and keep the tip at least 12" away from the teak.

A Note About Color Staining

Wood stains are intended to be permanent. Once you stain teak, you can't un-stain it. In other words, you cannot return to the natural golden brown or silver-grey color without numerous sandings. If you choose to stain teak after it has turned silver-grey, you must first sand it before applying stain.

A Note About Oiling

The natural oils that protect teak wood from weather, pests and rot is always inside the wood. Additional coats of oil added to the exterior won't soak in and penetrate the wood to protect it. In fact, commercial "teak oil" includes solvents which may actually damage the natural oils that are there naturally. If you decide you want to oil your teak, 100% tung oil or linseed oil is a better choice. Oils may also hold moisture and contaminants that can develop mold and fungus.

If you prefer the look of oiled teak and have already applied teak oil to your teak, don't panic. It will deplete over time. You can also give your teak a good cleaning to remove the oil, then apply teak protector, or tung or linseed oil if you wish. Another option is to lightly sand the very outer surface layer of the wood. This will expose a new layer of fresh wood that will have a golden tone.
