CHRIS DUNKER

Chris Dunker has photographed industrial culture for over two decades. His father, a photographer and industrial film maker for the military, introduced photography to Chris at an early age.

In 1995 he completed a Masters of Fine Arts in photography from Utah State University. Chris grew up in China Lake, California located in the isolated and remote high desert east of the Sierras and 100 miles west of Death Valley. This austere and harsh environment is punctuated with mining outposts and industrial-military structures. These were the photographic subjects and architectural influences of Dunker's formative years.
